The Healing Power of the Family

Parents willing to provide foster care or an adoptive home to formerly abused children are an endangered species. In the early 1980's foster parents numbered 150,000. However, by the 1990's their rank has shrunk to 100,000. Why such sharp drop off? Why such dramatic attrition?

In great part the precipitous decline in willing families relates to the severity of children's Emotional and behavioral problems coming into care. In the case of a foster mother whose nose was broken during a young child's temper tantrum; or in the adoptive family wherein the mother received broken ribs from a violent kick by her adopted son; or in the home of a single foster father where false allegations of sexual abuse by his teenaged foster son cost the unfortunate man his job—in each incident the parent figures have become victims of the child's disturbance.

According to Paul Steinhauer, M.D., the healthy family offers the child a nurturing "cradle of development". However, in the case of chronic maltreatment, the child is raised in a nest of thorns. Growing up in the thorny, hostile home life, the child expects the worst from caregivers, His or her negative expectations may continue long after the child has been removed from the source of maltreatment. Even in the protective, loving foster or adoptive family, the child's suspicion, anger and anxiety about past caregivers, persist. Locked in the past, the child may unwittingly recreate by his negative expectations and corresponding behavior an adoptive or foster family which resembles his earlier, maltreating family. With that, foster or adoptive parents become "prisoners of déjà vu", reluctantly drawn into a reenactment of the child's sad history.

A second factor in the decline of willing foster and adoptive parents is that of inadequate preparation and follow-up support to the parents. Specifically, these parents remain insufficiently informed of the significant behavioral and emotional challenges which the formerly maltreated child will present in care. Likewise, they are poorly prepared for the extensive changes in family dynamics which often follow the child's placement in their home. Lastly, foster and adoptive parents with disturbed children are rarely equipped with therapeutic strategies for dealing with the emotional tumult and problem behaviors which accompany troubled children.

The Healing Power of the Family (AABA has this book in the Lending Library) addresses several areas of vital importance for those parents who live with disturbed foster and adopted children and for those professionals who train, support and collaborate with these parents and the children.

The book has grown out of workshop and have underscored the central importance of the foster or adoptive family in turning around the lives of significantly troubled children and youth. They have also focused upon the curative relationships within the foster or adoptive family setting which can alter the child's cynical expectations about himself, caregivers and the world in general. The premise here is that emotional and sometimes physical wounds suffered by children during their unfortunate pasts may often respond dramatically to the healing power of the family—foster or adoptive. Moreover, proper understanding and preparation can magnify the positive influence of the family upon the child and diminish the negative impact of the child's disturbance on the family.

Overview of The Healing Power of the Family :

The Healing Power of the Family offers: a nontechnical, user-friendly approach to the understanding and treatment of disturbed foster and adopted children. It presents in written and graphic form the concepts from workshops for foster and adoptive parents, group and residential home staff, hospital personnel, teachers, and mental health and agency staff.

Chapter one addresses the staggering statistics related to increases in foster care placements and to the upsurge in the numbers of disturbed children in foster and special need's adoptive homes.

Chapter Two enumerates the most common behavioral/emotional problems observed in children who have been formerly maltreated and later reside in foster or adoptive families.

Chapter Three describes the disturbed child's powerfully negative impact on the foster or adoptive parents.

Chapter Four discusses ten examples of family-based interventions which have been employed by families in helping their troubled foster or adopted children. These examples are provided not as "cookbook" recipes for helping individual children but as illustrations of the creativity and ingenuity which is frequently required by teams of individuals (e.g. foster parents, therapists, and agency workers) to curb acting-out behaviors and foster attachments with disturbed children.

Chapter Five addresses four special issues related to foster and adopted children: the phenomenon of idealization and devaluation of parent figures; the search for biological roots; triggers which set off loss-sensitive children; and finally, the concept of resiliency or invulnerability in maltreated children.

The Book: The Healing Power of the Family is in the AABA Lending Library.

Mission:

Jasper Mountain's mission is to bring hope and healing to traumatized children and their families, and to enhance the physical, emotional and spiritual health of its clients and staff. We view the above mission as more than a nice thought; it is a daily focus of what we do. We work to bring hope to children and families by facilitating successes rather than failure. We help children and their families to see a better future and plot a course to meet their goals. We have an environment that is designed for healing in mind, body and spirit. We hear constantly that our knowledge, our experience and our approaches are unmatched when it comes to our target population. Finally, we believe that it is not only our children and their families that are here to change and grow, this includes our staff as well. We are all here to enhance our physical, emotional and spiritual health. In this quest there is no finish line.

WHAT drives AABA?

AABA is passionate about traumatized children.

AABA has first hand experience with Attachment Disorder children and knows the special care and treatment needed to help these children learn love and trust.

Left untreated, children with Attachment Disorder and other emotional disorders are often times shipped to out-of-state Residential Treatment Centers (RTC's), and are likely to become emotionally disturbed adults, unemployable, likely to be involved in drugs, alcohol or other illegal activities.

Attachment Disorder children place a huge impact in dollars, stress, crime, and livability in the Mat-Su Borough and throughout Alaska.

WHY should you care?

Because this is a preventable disorder and will take the community working together! AND, "BECAUSE THIS IS YOUR HOME!"

The Bingo Mania is a light yellow building away from all the hustle and bustle of the bowling alley. A much more pleasant and serene atmosphere. There is a Bingo Mania Deli for all the hungry Bingo people. Bring a friend and help celebrate this new kind of Bingo establishment. Bingo Mania is located at 6445 e.
