A Guide for Parents and Practitioners: Diagnosis, Assessment & Treatment of Foster & Adopted Children

By: Christopher J. Alexander,

The Path from Foster Care to Adoption

When a report is made to Child Protective Services alleging neglect or abuse, the child may or may not be taken into foster care shortly thereafter. In some instances, the child will simply be placed on a forty-eight-hour hold, which typically involves a brief out-of-home placement. In other cases, CPS may have concerns about the overall safety of the children, but rather than bring the child into foster care, in-home support services will be offered, with the goal to reduce or eliminate further risk factors for child maltreatment.

State and federal laws dictate the guidelines authorities must follow to justify longer-term (beyond forty-eight hours) foster placements for children. If the court grants its approval, the child is maintained in foster care until such time the issues that resulted in neglect or abuse are resolved. While the preference is to put children in a foster placement with blood relatives, this is not always possible. In some instances, the child may eventually live with a family member, but only after it is established that theirs is a safe and stable environment.

The majority of children taken into foster care are three years of age or younger. Nationally, neglect accounts for the highest number of cases, while physical abuse ranks second and sexual abuse ranks third. In 2006, there were 761,692 substantiated cases of abuse and neglect in the United States. In looking at these numbers, it should be kept in mind that medical neglect and general emotional maltreatment often is not included. Furthermore, states—and even counties within some states—have differing definitions for what constitutes a substantiated episode of abuse or neglect.

When a child is removed from a parent due to allegations of abuse or neglect, a treatment plan is developed that specifies the steps that must be taken before the court will place the child back into the home. The treatment goals can be relatively straightforward (e.g., maintain cleanliness of the home; obtain stable employment; physically separate from an abusive partner) or they can be quite extensive, such as the one listed below. Parents must successfully fulfill the parameters of the treatment plan within a designated period, at which point the child protection agency will implement a return-home plan for the child. If the parent does not successfully complete the treatment plan, the agency will submit to the court a petition to terminate the legal rights of the parent.

Also called Severance of Parental Rights, termination is a process of involuntarily taking away the parental rights of a parent that has abandoned a child, has without cause failed to support a child, has neglected or abused a child, or because of extended incarceration in prison, will be unavailable to properly parent or nurture the child during his formative years. Incarceration in and of itself is not automatically grounds for termination. Recent studies have found, for example, that 7-12

Respite Striving to make a Difference for families in the (Continued from Page 1) percent of children in foster care have mothers who are prisoners, but termination in these cases is assessed on an individual basis.

Grounds for termination vary from state to state. Some states take into account the age of the child and his wishes, while others do not. In addition, some states consider the relationship the child has with the foster parents—especially if the child is quite young—while others do not use that factor in determining termination.

Courts understandably take the genetic ties of the children to the biological parents very seriously, and judges insist on strong supporting evidence before termination any parental rights. Judges want assurance that the treatment plan developed for the parents was fair and that the goals set were attainable. She will want to hear the extent to which social workers and others on the case tried to help the parents meet their goals—such as providing them with appropriate referrals or transportation, for example—verses giving the parents a lengthy ‘to-do’ list and sending them on their way. The judge will also want to hear directly from the providers who met with the parents, in order to understand better the extent to which the parent made use of and benefited from the services being provided.

If termination of parental rights is successful, the workers on the case will usually decide if a “goodbye visit” between the parent and child would be beneficial. This is typically pursued in those instances where the parent will likely no longer have contact with their child. Goodbye visits are brief and are usually supervised by a social worker, case manager, or the child’s therapist.

Child protection agencies and the courts are mandated to follow the guidelines established under the Adoption and Safe Families Act (ASFA) of 1997. Signed into law on November 19, 1997, ASFA was designed to improve the safety of children, to promote adoptive and other permanent homes for children who need them, and to support families. As far as the courts are concerned, ASFA, establishes timelines under which termination of parental rights proceedings must begin, and how long a child can remain in foster care. Under ASFA, states must file a petition to terminate parental rights, and concurrently identify, recruit, process, and approve a qualified adoptive family on behalf of any child, regardless of age, that has been in foster care for fifteen out of the most recent twenty-two months. A child is considered as having entered foster care on the earlier of either the date of the first judicial finding of abuse or neglect, or sixty days after the child is removed from the home.

“Camp for Attachment Disorder Kids & Families” with Nancy Thomas camp directing and parent training.

Planning is still in the works, it will be approximately the third week of May 2012. We are looking at the camp grounds within approximately 45 minutes from Wasilla. We need 12 volunteers , one volunteer for each family. The local therapists, teachers, school counselors, parole officers, classroom aides and psychology students could learn new techniques and understand the families they work with more deeply. (3 have signed up) and we need 12 to 15 families (8 families have signed up)

If you are just interested in attending a Nancy Thomas one day workshop, the fee will be $150. Please sign –up. Call Laura @ 907-376-0366. It will be one day prior to the camp in May, exact dates are still in the works, but we need to know how big of a meeting room we need to rent.

This is a very special event, the kids that very seldom get a chance to go to camp with their families, and the families get a chance to bond with their kids with the direction on Nancy Thomas.

Nancy Thomas: camp directing and parent training

The one week Family Camp was designed to help families to bond and help children with ADD, ADHD, RAD, ODD, OCD, PTSD, Tourette’s, Asperger’s, the effects of early trauma and adoption and Bipolar disorder. With RAD so common and such a huge issue we have mainly focused on those children but many have multiple diagnosis. The focus of the camp is to increase love, laughter, bonding, self-control, and child conscience development in the family.

The goal of the Camp is to teach parents of emotionally disturbed children how to help their child to be successful. Each morning the parents attend a training, encouragement, support session. They then practice the new skills with staff support to fine-tune the interventions throughout the day.

The lessons are:

- Taking care of yourself
- Understanding the brain and how to heal it
- Establishing respect
- Understanding conscience development and how to advance it
- Creating and maintaining the heart to heart connection
- Helping a child develop self-control
- Setting limits and helping the child to accept the limits
- Supercharge your expectation of responsibility
- Expect restitution for damages
- Winning control battles
- Teach your child to think for him/herself
- Guide the processing of feelings
- Building self-worth

Afternoons are spent interacting and having fun together with bonding, cooperation and trust building activities as the parenting skills are put into place.

Back up and support for parents is instantly available. Nutritious meals are shared together as a family.

We have had 12 families at a time and it has worked out well. If they are mainly small families (one or two children) and the sleeping and eating arrangements work for staff and families we can help up to 16 families at a time. I have found many times the families are large and we end up with 12 families that total 75 people! It is hard to effectively meet the emotional needs of that many. A support group for the parents would be great to continue all year.

Camp: cabins secure enough to provide safety for the emotionally disturbed child to keep them from sneaking out at night and hurting others or themselves.

Each family needs their own cabin. Families do not share common areas in their cabins.

Staffed kitchen cleaning/dishwashing crew separate from the camp volunteer team. The dining room must be large enough to comfortably accommodate all families and camp staff during meals.

A training room that can seat all campers and staff.

A intervention room where the sound will not create a disturbance to any activities or people sleeping nearby. This room is for children having meltdowns or needing quiet time to shift gears and get back on track.

Entire camp located where the sound will not concern nearby residents. Privacy and a feeling of safety are essential for these children to heal as well as to avoid embarrassment to the parents from others who don't understand. To protect the privacy of the attending families, this group must be the only ones using the facility at that time.

Any adults (other than the parents) that will be interacting with children must attend the two day training. We will need a minimum of one volunteer team member, full time, per family for interventions and activities. I can bring a licensed therapist, who is well seasoned and trained as an intervention staff person. We will train 10 to 20 volunteers to do the work. Many times local therapists, teachers, school counselors, parole officers, classroom aides and psychology students want to come and participate to learn new techniques and understand the families they work with more deeply.

The camps we have done have been amazing! The success of the children and the happiness of the parents afterwards is heartwarming. I believe it is an investment in our children worth making!

We Can Make a Difference, Nancy Thomas

Quotes from Family Camp attendees:

"--- Our first revelation was that we weren't alone and there are other families like ours! Family Camp was the highlight of our year. The structure, knowledge, and support we shared is invaluable." - M. Williams

"During this time at camp, my husband and I have made major progress in being in agreement on how to parent our children." - Y. Harui

"I would recommend this camp to anyone with a RAD child. It was fun, informative, and a great time we could spend as a family." - P. Perez

"I have valuable tools I can use to reach my child's heart. The support staff helped give me a break from those meltdown times." - K. Rohr

"The opportunity to really bond and have fun with my two girls in a relaxed, fun-filled setting, touched my heart and will be appreciated for the rest of our lives." - B. Pattison

"Her (Nancy Thomas) techniques are effective and easy to understand. Her sense of humor is infectious and drives the point home." - S. Langmeade

About Alaska Attachment & Bonding Associates

AABA is a non-profit organization that provides education, training, support and advocacy for kinship, adoptive and foster families who care for children with emotional disorders, such as Reactive Attachment Disorder (RAD), and professionals who work with this population of children.

AABA's area of Focus: PREVENTION of abuse/neglect

PLACEMENT information

TRAINING in Attachment

COMMUNITY Resource information

WHAT drives AABA?

AABA is passionate about traumatized children.

AABA has first hand experience with Attachment Disorder children and knows the special care and treatment needed to help these children learn love and trust.

Left untreated, children with Attachment Disorder and other emotional disorders are often times shipped to out-of-state Residential Treatment Centers (RTC's), and are likely to become emotionally disturbed adults, unemployable, likely to be involved in drugs, alcohol or other illegal activities.

Attachment Disorder children place a huge impact in dollars, stress, crime, and livability in the Mat-Su Borough and throughout Alaska.

WHY should you care?

Because this is a preventable disorder and will take the community working together! AND, "BECAUSE THIS IS YOUR HOME!"

The Bingo Mania is a light yellow building away from all the hustle and bustle of the bowling alley. A much more pleasant and serene atmosphere.
